European Athletics President's Welcome Message

I am very pleased to welcome everyone to the 35th edition of the European Athletics Indoor Championships which are here in Glasgow, the second time that this city has been the host of this competition.

The previous time was 1990 and, on that occasion, we had 28 Member Federations represented and 370 athletes. It is a measure of how our sport has grown in the last three decades, even considering the changes in the political landscape in that time, that European Athletics anticipates nearly all of our 51 Member Federations to send participants and around 600 athletes to compete.

The championships in 1990 were the last time the Soviet Union and two separate German teams competed, and it was also the last two-day European Athletics Indoor Championships and the last annual competition.

Nowadays these championships are biennial and last for three days, and although these innovations came about many years ago, they are small but relevant examples about how European Athletics has constantly strived to make our competitions more attractive to athletes and the general public alike; and I can promise we will continue to do so.

The magnificent Emirates Arena that is the venue for these championships has quickly established itself in the seven years since it was built as one of Europe's top indoor sporting arena and I cannot understate how delighted that we are here.

Although I was in Berlin last summer for the European Athletics Championships, I heard nothing but praise for the Emirates Arena as the venue for the cycling events which were part of the inaugural multi-sport European Championships.

The European Athletics Indoor Championships are the first major athletics event of the year and Glasgow will see many of the champions and medallists from Berlin in action as they set their sights on not only making the podium here but using this event as an important test ahead of this summer's major competitions including the European Athletics Team Championships and the IAAF World Championships.

Consequently, taking all these factors into consideration, I am looking forward immensely to the three days of competition here in Glasgow.

On behalf of European Athletics, I am very grateful to British Athletics, the city of Glasgow and everyone else involved with the Local Organising Committee for all their hard work and commitment to the successful staging of this event.

Local Organising Committee's Welcome Message

Glasgow has a long-standing and strong relationship with athletics, and a reputation for hosting world-class sporting events. When the Kelvin Hall International Sports Arena opened in 1988, it gave the city a new home for athletics events and saw Glasgow host its first European Athletics Indoor Championships in 1990.

Now, almost 30 years later, we are glad to welcome the 35th edition of the Championships back to our city, and to the iconic Emirates Arena, a venue which has hosted numerous athletics competitions since opening in 2012 and has seen some spectacular performances from home and international athletes.

These efforts and results are remembered thanks to vital statistics books such as this, which tell the tales of the achievements from the previous 34 European Athletics Indoor Championships. Some of the athletes recently featured in this handbook will surely rise to prominence again here over the three days of competition.

Thanks to all those from the Association of Track and Field Statisticians involved in pulling this book together – without your dedication over numerous decades, records such as this book would not be possible.

I hope the three days of competition here in our city will see cause for many of these records to be updated.

Welcome to Glasgow!

Billy Garrett

Director of Sport and Events at Glasgow Life and Co-Chair of the Glasgow 2019 Steering Committee
